Bigelow was about 30 years old and the woman not more than 25. She bore a character which was blameless. John E. Bigelow, who committed the crime, was the son of Jimes Bigelow, an ex-mayor of Morristown, N. J., who is a retired lawyer.

The young man lived on West Thirty-eighth street and just before the Christmas holidays, was a member of Sydney Drew's empany. It was during this engagement that he met Amy Thill. He fell in love with her. She was also a member of the company, and they decided to leave it at Christmas. Since then neither of them has been engaged in professional work. Bigelow is it at Christmas. Since then neither of them has been engaged in professional work. Bigelow is said to have been offered an engagement but refused to accept it urless she was also engaged. Members of the theatrical profession tonight assert that the case is a parallel to the case of James Gentry, who shot Madge York at Philadelphia, in few weeks are a few weeks ago.

topic of the day. Both government and opposition are holding frequent caucuses and what the outcome will be is difficult to predict. One thing is certain, that the Manitoba government will resent interference by Ottawa on educational matters. The newspaper organ of the government has this official statement under the heading "Manitoba's Answer:"

"We are asked to restore the school system that was in operation previous to 1830. Let Quebec and Ottawa rest assured that the restoration will never be made. Manitoba has too keen a sense of justice, too much regard for truth be made. Manitoba has too keen a sense of justice, too much regard for truth and equity to recognize as a religious aristocracy an element of its popula-tion by no means the most worthy. As a civilized people attempting to realize in a measure the idols of the nineteeth century, Manitobans will not silently submit to the demand that silently submit to the demand that they should turn back the wheel of progress three hundred years. "Anyone who believes that all citizens are equal in the sight of the law and that what is good enough for one is good enough for another, must stand by the act of 1890. And this is our answer to Quebec: We shall not allow the state to support religion; we shall not allow the church to control the state we shall not return to the civilization of the dark ages; we shall not recognize Rome as better, or in any way different from others; we shall hold to the principle of equal rights for all, and that principle shall be dearer to us than confederation itself."

FROM THE HAWVILLE CLARION. The slight unpleasantness which marred decommendated the norm in particulation of the conditions of the condition the last session of the Literary society, originated in the offering of the follow-ing topic by Mr. J. S. Kinsabby as the originated in the offering of the following topic by Mr. J. S. Kinsabby as the subject for the next debate: "Resolved. That a preacher can eat more chicken than a coyote." As the Rev. Mr. Harps had dined at the house of Mr. Kinsabby on the previous Sabbath, upon which occasion fried chicken of the yellow-legged variety had figured prominently on the festal board, the reverend gentlemen quite naturally thought that the speaker was hinting at him, and said as much in a few well-chosen words. Mr. Kinsabby replied with biting sarcasm that he had meant nobody in particular, but If there were any carpet-bagging preachers in the room whom the cap fitted they were welcome to don it. Thereupon the clergyman retorted that while he was a meek and lowly folllower of his divine master, he was a one-eyed apostate within the sound of his voice who had not yet paid for the performance of the marriage ceremony which bound him to his present wife, and who desired to take these remarks unto himself, he—the Rev. Mr. Harps—would take pleasure in demonstrating his ability to castigate him—the said one-eyed apostate—on less ground than he stood on. As Mr. Kinsabby rejoices in but a single eye and knew himself to be indebted to the divine, as just intimated, he became genuinely angry. Serious complications might have arisen had not Aikall ike and Hank Bitters been keenly alive to the duties of the position to which they were recently appointed and kept the disputants apart. Aside from this little episode, nothing occurred to detract from the pleasure of the evening, and all present felt that it was indeed good to be there.—Puck.
